

A Tribute to Patty "Payne" Martone, '49 (continued)

Today the State Grill still stands, the Candlelight still feeds the hungry, and the Tecumseh Library turns the pages. Abby Brown and Scott's bakery tempt passers-by, and drugstores, food markets and specialty shops offer directions and furnish items we need. When one goes east beyond Parkview Hospital, old State Street gives way to the new. Wonderful eateries dot the curbs. Professional office complexes have mushroomed and shopping centers sprawl to the bypass and beyond.

Each of us has a special street, an artery that runs through our lives. Each time I drive State Street, the memories tumble by. I see old friends, hear old melodies, recite for old teachers, sigh for the times that are gone and will never come again. But so long as the concrete ribbons runs from the rising sun to the evening's dusk, the good times will roll across Crescent where the spies ran. I lovingly "state" my case.

I have always loved the State Street hill I walked every day from my Oakland Street home to North Side High School. It led me from my Franklin School beginnings across Spy Run Creek to Clinton Street where I knew a rich, meaningful education awaited me. As I walked the curve past Oakridge and Terrace Road,

I knew ahead were opportunities for a blue-collar damsel to become an upward mobile academic. The State Street hill was my gateway to great beginnings.

Now like so much of yesterday, the powers that be are about to adjust our view, change our perspective. They will remove its curve, flatten its surface and send it straight to Clinton Street. Like Charkey's and Scotts Bakery, my State Street continues to change.

Franklin School no longer graduates little girls and sends them east across the river. With that said, they can uproot the concrete that strengthened me and launch their new design.

North Side still stands midst the cottonwoods, the Saint Joe still flows by and even though the building has been reconfigured and some neighbors are no longer around, some of my "State of Mind" remains. After all, Parkview Randallia still heals the ill and Abby Brown still dips her chocolate.
